

We investigate the information design problem with multiple agents. Generalizing Mathevet-Perego-Taneva's example, we characterize the optimal value of the information designer's payoff by a linear programming. We also discuss the relationship between information design and robustness to incomplete information perturbations.